Everyday Duluth 2011

These painted houses make us smile. Our picnic tables get full of snow. Once in a while we are treated with a sunset.

Some brave souls participate in the Polar Plunge, a fundraiser for Special Olympics. It's no big deal to the Finns among us. Our steam plant provides heat for most of Downtown. Chester Terrace is on the National Register of Historic Places.

February 2011

March can be gray and long. We are happy to see the ships again when the season starts at mid-month. Residents of Central Hillside don't need a watch, as Historic Central High School's clock tower keeps perfect time. But don't be fooled by the pretty-to-look-at, but not too accurate clocks Downtown.

People know summer has arrived when the Portland Malt Shoppe opens. Grandma's Marathon and Juneteenth happen on the same day. The Community Garden program tells us we must plant our seeds by June 15 or forfeit our plot.

June 2011

In the warm the weather of July, Duluthians and tourists mix to enjoy a summer evening along the rocky shore. The Twelve Holy Apostles Church holds the annual Taste of Greece, and we have to wait until nearly 10 p.m. for it to get dark enough to enjoy the outdoor movies at Leif Erikson Park.

We don't ordinarily see these Tall Ships, but when they come for a visit in August, people from miles around visit Duluth to get a chance to go on board. Tourists flock to Canal Park. One of our busiest intersections is where Sixth Avenue East turns into Central Entrance at Mesaba Avenue and Rice Lake Road. Here you can see a little tree at the landmark Coppertop Church. The wind whips by this hill and causes its branches to be permanently windswept.

November 2011

In December our 42° lake is warmer than the frigid air. We prepare for the Christmas season. Often we have to dig ourselves out of the snow, and once in awhile it snows so much that using a snowmobile is easier than using a car.

Naomi Yaeger-Bischoff

Naomi Yaeger-Bischoff is a photojournalist living in Duluth, Minnesota. She photographs people, events and scenery in Duluth and surrounding areas.

Naomi is the editor of The Hillsideer, a monthly neighborhood publication, and always carries a camera, pen and notebook. She does freelance writing and photography under the name Sun Dog Press.

In 2008 she created the Duluth Daily Photo weblog. Every day she takes many photos and uploads one uniquely Duluth image to this website. Each posting includes a short history or nugget of information to help viewers better understand Duluth's unique character. Join her on her explorations of Duluth by subscribing to www.DuluthDailyPhoto.com. While some of her images may look familiar, the text of the post might introduce you to new insights about this city on the hill by the Lake.

Having spent the majority of her life living above the 45th parallel, Yaeger has a passion for the Northland and the seasons of the year. Her images celebrate both the raw beauty of the environment and slice-of-life everyday scenes enjoyed by the people who make UpNorth their home.
